NEW BUSINESS:

- Scott Wine had a discussion with an area resident about the fishing at the Coulterville Lake. The concern was that at present time the lake is seeing an increase in fishermen and the lake has no limits set for crappie as it does with other fish. Wine had spoke with Dale Schumer, water plant operator, about the increase in people at the lake and the possible effects. Schumer spoke with Eric Ratcliff a fish biologist with IDNR and asked if Coulterville should regulate the crappie or the fishing at the moment.

Mr. Radcliff explained to Schumer that every summer they test and record the health of that lake. Last summer the lake was in great shape for size and amount. The lake has had a great health record since 1939. Crappie is a very invasive species and its reproductive system varies yearly. A lake as small as Coulterville's is extremely hard to manage by regulation. Mr. Ratcliff stated that the health of the lake should not be impacted by a short-term change and did not think it necessary to regulate.
